ACADEMIC SCHOLAR IN MEDICAL EDUCATION / DIRECTOR, CLINICAL SIMULATION CENTRE

Queen’s University School of Medicine is actively seeking a Medical Education Scholar who will also be the Director of our Clinical Simulation Centre. This position will offer a physician who is passionate about medical education, research, and the field of Clinical Simulation the ability to develop innovative techniques and programs, in a state-of-the-art clinical simulation facility.

The successful candidate will assume a reduced clinical workload in order to focus on scholarly research activities in Clinical Simulation. The balance of the role will be dedicated to directorship of the Clinical Simulation Centre, promoting excellence in patient care through simulation-based educational programs and research in a safe, supportive, interprofessional learning environment.

We are seeking applicants who hold an MD degree and are eligible to practice in Ontario, and who have an outstanding emerging or established research program in medical education with an interest in the field of clinical simulation. Qualified candidates will be compensated appropriately.

So if you have a passion for clinical simulation teaching techniques and would like to develop your research in our state-of-the-art facility, please forward your CV and inquires to Andrea Sealy, Senior Staffing Officer, Faculty of Health Sciences, by email at andrea.sealy@queensu.ca.
