M. Ceci said that students had many concerns about the tuition proposal. He noted the discrepancy between government funding and what students pay. Fluctuating exchange rates make planning difficult. International students need predictability for the four years of their program. He recommended that the University issue a supplement on Tuition similar to the Financial Update produced by the Vice-Principal (Operations and Finance). He asked which International Students were consulted on the Tuition Proposal.

The Vice-Principal (Academic) described consultation with the SGPS, International Students and a special session at QUIC (Queen's University International Centre). Students in need have access to financial aid once they arrive at Queen's. Unfortunately, because provincial funding plans continue to be uncertain, the University has very little information in advance to provide a consistent and useful level of predictability for tuition fees. With respect to
