Dear Colleague, Alum or Friend of QSPS

It gives me great pleasure to inform you that members of our school have been awarded the University-wide Principal’s Curriculum Development Award for 2017.

Professors Rachel LaForest (MPA program director), Bob Wolfe (emeritus professor), Andrew Graham (adjunct professor), Fiona Froats (program administrator) and students Joel Jahrsdorfer and Fatemah Mayanloo are the recipients of the award and on behalf of the school I offer my most sincere congratulations and gratitude for their hard work and innovation.

Queen’s School of Policy Studies is dedicated to ensuring that our graduates are most ably equipped to thrive in their professional careers and much effort is placed in our relationship with government and other employers to ensure that our curriculum, programs and the teaching and learning environment have evolved in the context of an ever-changing public policy environment.

So, in the words of Principal Daniel Woolf to the award winners, “Congratulations for your outstanding contributions to curriculum development at Queen’s”. And for showcasing Queen’s School of Policy Studies.

Yours sincerely,

David M C Walker MD
