Advice to On-Campus Students

Online courses are considered equivalent to on-campus courses and count toward a Queen's degree in the same way as on-campus courses. Online courses are intended to supplement offerings for on-campus students and to provide flexibility and choice. On-campus students are not required to take online courses; they are simply an option. On-campus students may begin enrolling in online courses after their first year at Queen's. The Faculty of Arts and Science encourages first year on-campus students to take part in the classroom experience to help with the transition from high school.

Queen's Commerce (http://business.queensu.ca/bcom/), Engineering and Applied Science, (https://engineering.queensu.ca/) and Nursing (http://nursing.queensu.ca/) students who have been admitted into a Dual Degree program can take many online courses through ASO to support the completion of a Dual Degree in English, Global Development Studies, History, Liberal Studies, Life Sciences and Psychology. This option may help students access courses necessary to complete their dual degree requirements.
