

How Studying Abroad Can Help

YOU AND YOUR CAREER

1. Employers will recognize the initiative you've taken in studying abroad and value your willingness and readiness to adapt to new environments and take considered risks
2. If you study abroad you can potentially finish your degree early and enter the job market before your peers
3. Studying abroad can force you to break bad habits as well as demonstrate your willingness to challenge yourself and step out of your comfort zone
4. Studying abroad changes the way you look at the world, promotes personal growth, and helps you develop key skills sought by businesses
5. It's a great way to make new friends and meet professional connections
6. Discover new interests and hobbies – use your time abroad a way to learn more about your passions

“Employers want workers who excel at problem solving, communication and teamwork... International study creates global-mindedness and these in-demand skills.”

— Frank McKenna, deputy chair, TD Bank, former ambassador to the United States and former premier of New Brunswick.
