Editor Listing for Graduate Students

This document has been prepared to support Queen's graduate students in identifying and accessing editors for their academic work. In this document, you will find the following:

- Listing of Editors: description of editors' backgrounds, expertise, rate information, and contact information
- Editing checklist: a list of editing activities to help students work with editors and negotiate the editing process
- Supervisory Permission Form: a form which students may use to notify their graduate supervisor that they are engaging with an editor on their academic work
- Guidelines for Ethical Editing of Theses/Dissertations: a guideline document prepared by the Editors' Association of Canada.

It is recommended that graduate students read the editing checklist, supervisory permission form, and guidelines for ethical editing of theses/dissertations carefully prior to engaging editing services. It is expected that editors will perform copy editing and nothing more extensive (e.g., re-writing) to maintain the integrity of students' academic work. Information on Academic Integrity can be found on both the Queen's Academic Integrity website and the Student Academic Success Services website.

This listing of editors does not represent endorsement or recommendation of any editor. The editors listed in this document are not employees of Queen's University. Editors are free to decline work at their will. All transactions related to editing services are between the student and the editor. This listing will be updated yearly.

Feedback

If you have feedback related to your experience with editors listed in this document, you may share it with us by emailing: sgsasst@queensu.ca and using the subject line: Editor Listing Feedback

Editor Background
I have been a full-time editor since 2005. I am a member of the Editors' Association of Canada. A recent book that I edited (for a first-time author) won a literary prize. My clients come to me to ensure their content is not only correct, but also clear and effective. It's about making sure the content that you have written accomplishes your objectives, especially if you want your content to be accepted by a journal or publisher, if you are applying for a grant, or you need your thesis to be accepted.
Discipline Specializations &amp; Background
I have significant experience in engineering (mainly civil), architecture, pharmaceuticals, medicine, health care, finance, marketing/business, and education. I have edited a variety of different types of documents: journal articles, book chapters, theses, and non-fiction books. My services include fact-checking and ensuring your references (e.g., APA style) are complete and correct.

Editor Background

A member of Editors Canada, and formerly a manager at Queen's University's Student Academic Success Services (SASS), I have 12 years of experience in editing and teaching academic writing. I acquired most of this experience at Queen's, but I've also worked at other universities and in public schools. For two years early in my career, I edited government documents full-time. I have a BEd (Hons), an MA in English literature, and about half of a PhD in Education. For the last few years, I've run my own business, Seven Crows Academic Editing.

My clients include professional academics working at Canadian universities and in the federal government in economics, engineering, art history, and other disciplines.

I respect my clients' authorial voices while helping them adhere to Canadian academic conventions. My experience as an academic skills specialist and writing consultant at Queen's SASS helps me understand how past experiences with writing, and current academic habits and mindsets, can affect a person's academic writing efforts.

I'm careful, collaborative and professional; I often make people laugh while teaching them grammar, and I believe good academic writing can make the world a better place.

Discipline Specializations & Background

Seven Crows is a small academic editing company. We also coach academic writers to develop their writing and editing skills, habits and confidence. Two of our editors / coaches have PhDs; another has an MSc with a technical writing certificate. We are ethical and supportive, and we want to help you succeed.

We welcome all doctoral students, professors, and professional academics in all academic disciplines. Seven Crows works respectfully with clients of diverse identities, and we are experienced in working with people who have English as an additional language.

We work in Word, LaTeX and Pressbooks.

Editor Background

I help researchers articulate their skills, experiences, and plans to the right audience in the right genre. With a PhD in English Literature, experience reviewing arts & culture grants for the Vancouver Foundation, and success in editing $4M+ of research funding proposals, I specialize in editing grant applications, journal articles, book chapters, monographs, and promotion and tenure dossiers.

I bring expertise in stylistic and structural editing, including shaving down the word count in too-long manuscripts. By shifting words within sentences and sentences within paragraphs, I can enable your writing to hit its most emphatic points in the most strategically important parts of your document.

If you're looking for an editor to fix your punctuation or format your list of works cited, I'm not the right person for you. If you want someone to help you make your work as clear and compelling as possible—if you want to be read, understood, cited, and acted upon—please be in touch.

You can learn more about my evidence-based approach to academic editing in my advice column, Ask Dr. Editor, which is published each month in University Affairs:

Permission Form for Professional Editing of Theses

__[Editor]__ offers ethical editing services based on the “Guidelines for Editing Theses” developed by the Editors’ Association of Canada in consultation with university administrators (see <http://www.editors.ca/hire/theses.html>). These guidelines are intended to ensure that the theses submitted by graduate students are indeed their own work, only more polished.

The guidelines stipulate that editing must not affect the content or structure of the thesis. Editing tasks are therefore limited to copy editing, stylistic editing, and proofreading. Substantive editing, which can involve extensive structural revisions and rewriting by the editor, is not part of thesis editing.

The Editors’ Association guidelines recommend that the student obtain written permission from the thesis supervisor for the editorial work to be done. Please have your supervisor sign the form below. Having permission for editing protects students in defending their work to the thesis committee. The permission form also specifies the editorial tasks that may be done.

Editing Checklist

The following checklist for editing theses is based on the Professional Editorial Standards revised in 2009 by the Editors' Association of Canada. The items can be discussed and negotiated as needed.

Copy Editing

The goal of copy editing is to ensure correctness, consistency, accuracy, and completeness.

- Correct errors in spelling, grammar, and punctuation
- Correct or query errors in diction and usage
- Identify and consistently apply categories of editorial style (e.g., capitalization, numbers, abbreviations, lists, heading levels)
- Develop a style sheet, or follow one that is provided, to track editorial style and apply it consistently
- Identify and query internal inconsistencies in logic, factual details, and cross-references
- Review citations for consistency and either apply the appropriate style or identify errors for the student to correct
- Query missing elements in citations
- Point out where permissions may be required
- Make minor formatting changes to ensure consistency in presentation of tables, figures, and other visual elements

Stylistic Editing

Stylistic editing strives to clarify meaning, improve flow, and smooth language.

- Improve sentence construction to more effectively convey meaning (e.g., by making unparallel constructions parallel, using subordinate structures for subordinate ideas, choosing active voice over passive in most contexts)
- Eliminate wordiness
- Query student about word choice or syntax if meaning is unclear
- Suggest reordering of sentences within a paragraph to improve the flow of ideas and to clarify focus of paragraph
- Check that transitions between sentences and paragraphs are smooth and support the coherent development of the text; if not, query
- Alert student to problems in consistency and appropriateness of tone

Proofreading

- Correct typographical errors
- Check for awkward line or page breaks
