Queen’s University Library, Humanities & Social Sciences Department
HIST 212 Internship
Winter 2024

Queen’s University Library stimulates excellence in research and scholarship through its collections, people, partnerships and services, and its physical and virtual environments. The library is a strategic asset to the University, contributing to the exploration and sharing of knowledge and the development of lifelong inquiry skills for the betterment of a global society.

Under the supervision of the subject librarian for the Department of History, the Humanities and Social Sciences Department at Stauffer Library is looking to work with a History undergraduate student on a number of projects including:

- creation of an online resource to support courses in the History department that focus on decolonization, Indigenization and African American history
- finding open educational resources that can be used in a variety of courses to support decolonization and indigenization
- collection assessment project involving diverse book awards

Job Qualifications
- Excellent organizational and research skills; well-developed communications skills (written and oral)
- Facility with common office software: MS Word and Excel
- Interest in library and information studies