

Queen's Campus Climate 2021

A snapshot report of responses to the Queen's Student Experiences Survey

Queen's is situated on traditional Anishinaabe and Haudenosaunee territory. We acknowledge, with respect, the diverse histories and cultures of the Indigenous peoples of this land.

We understand the significance of community and place as we work to assess campus climate. We acknowledge that Education has played a specific role in colonization and that it will also play a role in moving us forward. We acknowledge that the work required is a process of continual learning, reflection, long-term commitment to doing better, and action.

We are all treaty people and accept our collective responsibility to each other.

This report reviews Queen's students' experiences and perceptions of campus safety, incidents of exclusion, harassment, racism and sexual violence.

These are difficult topics. If you feel overwhelmed at any point while reading this document or reflecting on the topics of this report, pay attention to your needs. There are resources to support you.

These resources can be found at

<https://www.queensu.ca/inclusive/queens-student-experience-survey/student-support-resources>.

A. Project background

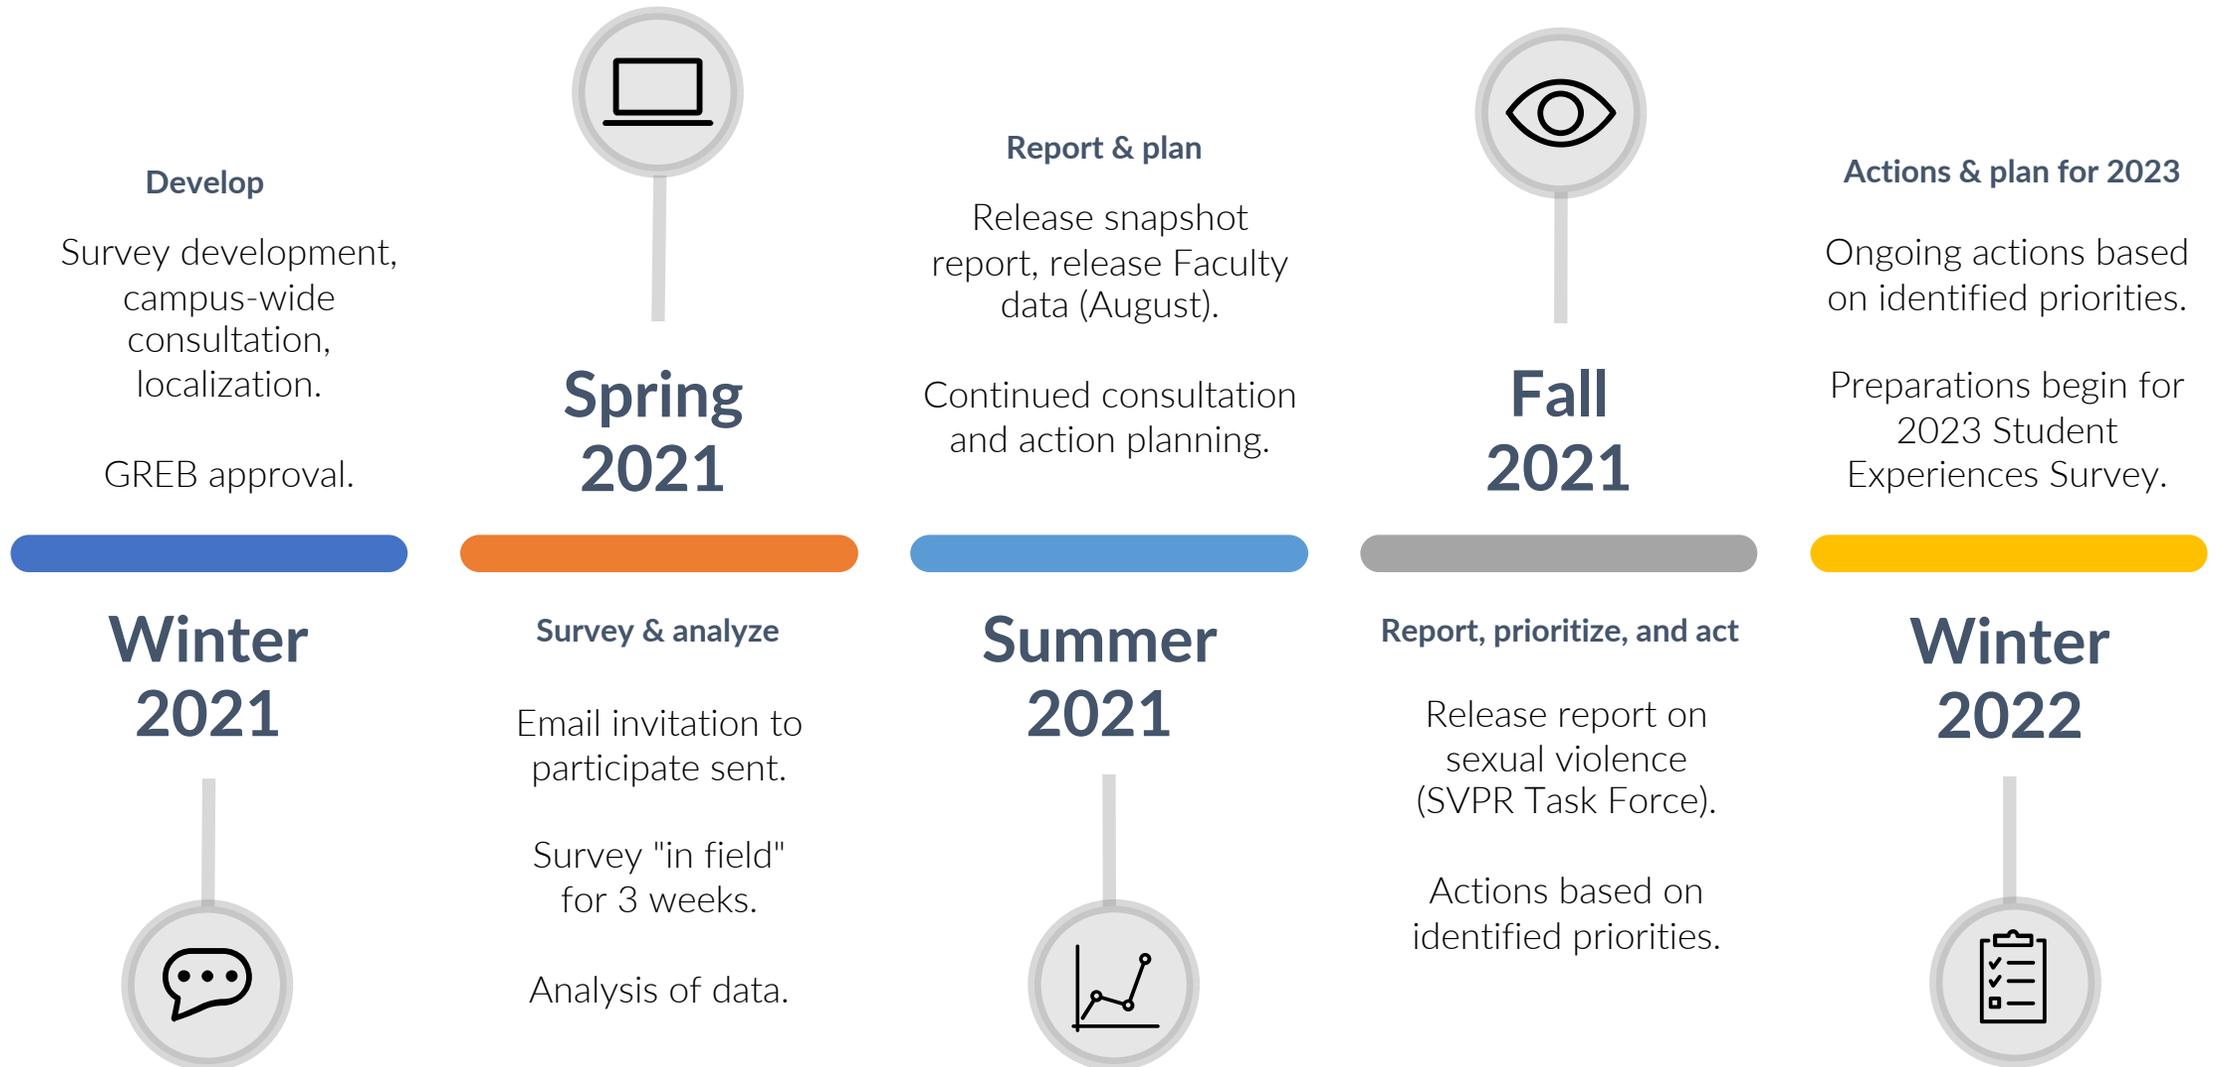

In August 2020, Queen's senior leadership signed the Queen's University Administration's Declaration of Commitment to Address Systemic Racism, committing to challenging racism and discrimination “through the critical examination of our own roles in its perpetuation and in the practices and policies that may support persistent inequities.”

Campus climate includes experiences, perceptions, and behaviours with respect to diversity, inclusion, and sexual violence at the university. Perceptions and experiences of safety, belonging, interactions within classrooms, interactions shaped by identity and the university's responses all determine campus climate.

Led by Principal Deane, and sponsored by the Declaration Implementation Group, the Queen's Student Experiences Survey provides a mechanism for measuring and monitoring campus climate and culture. Information from this survey is critical in creating an inclusive campus environment, tailoring policies and programming, and improving services and the campus response to discrimination and harassment.

We are pleased to provide the campus community with this snapshot of the 2021 survey data.

A. Project timeline

B. Survey methodology - overview

Queen's used the tested and validated Educational Advisory Board (EAB) Campus Climate Survey as the core survey instrument for the Student Experiences Survey. The EAB survey tool was developed using best practice recommendations from subject matter experts in diversity and inclusion, sexual violence, survey design and policy recommendations.

Following consultations with key stakeholders across the university, the project team made minor adjustments to the EAB survey instrument to localize and customize the tool for the Queen's environment. This survey received General Research Ethics Board (GREB) approval.

All registered Queen's students (undergraduate and graduate, full time and part time) were invited to participate in the anonymous survey between March 4-25, 2021.

Students participating in the Student Experiences Survey were offered a token of appreciation in acknowledgement of the student labour involved in completing this survey.

We are grateful to the students who contributed information about their experiences and perceptions regarding campus climate and acknowledge that for some this was not easy.

B. Survey methodology – Covid-19 context

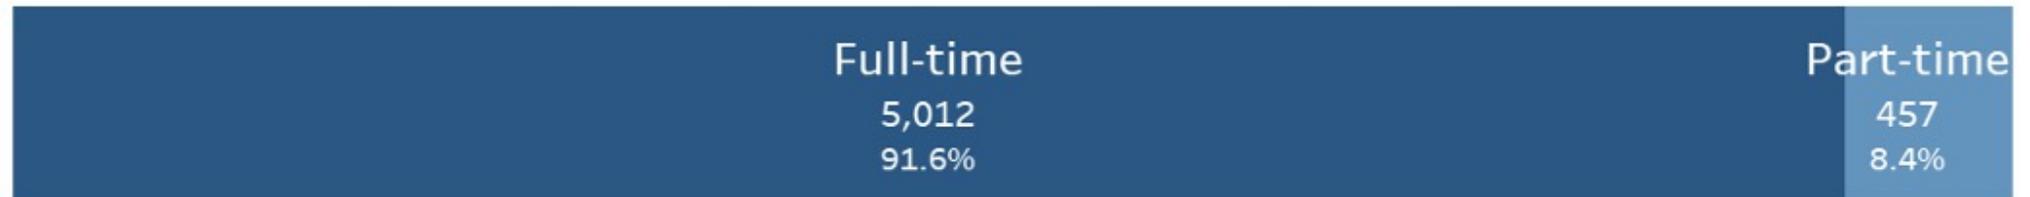

The university recognizes the unique and unusual circumstances presented by the Covid-19 pandemic as related to surveying students about the campus climate.

Most Queen's students undertook remote learning in 2020-21, with many living outside the Kingston area. Given the importance of developing data driven actions that will help the university move toward a more equitable and welcoming university community, this pilot survey was launched, with a commitment to surveying the student population every two years.

The survey did encourage students who had been at Queen's for the Winter 2020 term to respond based on their experiences both on campus at that time, and during the Fall 2020 and Winter 2021 terms, so that pre-pandemic, on-campus experiences were captured.

Reporting

Within each section, this snapshot report provides overall responses (all respondents) and responses by identity where statistically significant differences were found.

A statistically significant finding is one in which it is very likely the finding is real, reliable, and not due to chance. Said another way, statistical significance helps quantify whether a result is likely due to chance or to some factor of interest. These differences met a meaningful strength of correlation.

E. Moving Forward

Improving campus climate

Queen's is committed to responding to the experiences, perceptions and attitudes reported in the Student Experiences Survey with meaningful actions to improve the campus climate and culture for all students.

This summer and fall, Queen's will:

- Continue to work with the survey's Student Advisory Group to identify actions and develop a student engagement strategy for the fall when most students return to campus
- Complete faculty-level and other analyses, including international students, Indigenous students, and graduate students, to take a closer look at the student experience.
- Continue to consult with stakeholders

Funding from Principal Deane will allow actions that result from this work to build capacity and drive change.

The Queen's Student Experiences Survey Student Advisory Group will provide input regarding student perspectives to the survey project team.

The Student Advisory Group will:

- Help identify important data considerations, to advance understanding of the student experience;
- Review early analyses of information obtained in the Student Experiences Survey;
- Provide input regarding communicating the results of the survey to students;
- Identify groups of students to approach for consultations regarding survey findings;
- Help facilitate consultations with groups of students related to findings or the identification of possible next steps regarding the survey.
