Biography:

Ricard Zapata-Barrero is a professor of applied political theory and qualitative methods in the Department of Political and Social Sciences, Universitat Pompeu Fabra, Barcelona. His main lines of research deal with contemporary issues of liberal democracy in contexts of diversity, especially the relationship between democracy, citizenship and immigration. He is Director of GRITIM-UPF, Interdisciplinary Research Group in Immigration; a member of several European projects which examine the link between cultural policy and diversity; a member of several government advisory boards; and a regular contributor to media and policy debates. Among his publications are: Addressing Tolerance and Diversity Discourses in Europe: A Comparative Overview of 16 European Countries; Spheres of Diversity from Concept to Policy; and Immigration and Self-Government of Minority Nations.
