Dietlind Stolle is Professor in Political Science at McGill University and Director of the Inter-University Centre for the Study of Democratic Citizenship (CSDC). She has published on voluntary associations, trust, institutional foundations of social capital, the consequences of ethnic diversity, political mobilization, and new forms of political participation. Her newest book is Political Consumerism—Global Responsibility in Action (2013, Cambridge University Press, with Michele Micheletti). Currently she serves as the PI for the second wave of Canadian Youth Study and co-PI for the Canadian Election Survey (CES). Her new projects include experiments in political communication, collaborations with neuroscientists, and projects on the role of health as well as pregnancy for political mobilization.
