Academic Integrity: Academic integrity is constituted by the five core fundamental values of honesty, trust, fairness, respect and responsibility (as articulated by the Centre for Academic Integrity, Duke University; see www.academicintegrity.org) all of which are central to the building, nurturing and sustaining of an academic community in which all members of the community will thrive. Adherence to the values expressed through academic integrity forms a foundation for the "freedom of inquiry and exchange of ideas" essential to the intellectual life of the University. (see the Senate Report on Principles and Priorities http://www.queensu.ca/secretariat/policies/senateandtrustees/principlespriorities.html).

Students are responsible for familiarizing themselves with the regulations concerning academic integrity and for ensuring that their assignments conform to the principles of academic integrity. Information on academic integrity is available in the Arts and Science Calendar (see Academic Regulation 1 http://www.queensu.ca/artsci/academic-calendars/2011-2012-calendar/academic-regulations/regulation-1), on the Arts and Science website (see http://www.queensu.ca/artsci/academics/undergraduate/academic-integrity), and from the instructor of this course. Departures from academic integrity include plagiarism, use of unauthorized materials, facilitation, forgery and falsification, and are antithetical to the development of an academic community at Queen's. Given the seriousness of these matters, actions which contravene the regulation on academic integrity carry sanctions that can range from a warning or the loss of grades on an assignment to the failure of a course to a requirement to withdraw from the university.

GRADING SCHEME:

All components of this course will receive letter grades which, for purposes of calculating your course average, will be translated into numerical equivalents using the Faculty of Arts and Science approved scale:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Assignment mark</th>
<th>Numerical value for calculation of final mark</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>A+</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A</td>
<td>87</td>
</tr>
<tr>

Queen's University is committed to achieving full accessibility for persons with disabilities. Part of this commitment includes arranging academic accommodations for students with disabilities to ensure they have an equitable opportunity to participate in all of their academic activities. If you are a student with a disability and think you may need accommodations, you are strongly encouraged to contact the Disability Services Office (DSO) and register as early as possible. For more information, including important deadlines, please visit the DSO website at: http://www.queensu.ca/hcds/ds/
Political communication may be defined in a number of ways. Denton and Woodward describe it in as "public discussion about the allocation of public resources (money), official authority (who decides), and official sanctions (what is to be rewarded)". Murray Edelman sees political communication as a spectacle; the conscious or subconscious creation of images, problems and antagonisms. A Marxist approach might be to see political communication as part of the ongoing and pervasive set of communication practices which transcends classes. All definitions, to some extent, explain how the state, explicitly or otherwise, uses communication apparatuses to ensure consent and legitimacy.

Thus, political communication can take many forms, from the overt such as political advertising and propaganda to the subtle such as the creation and propagation of myths and symbols of the state. They can be embedded in the entertainment of popular culture or take the guise of ‘information’ found in news.

Course objectives:

1. knowledge objectives:

Students will be introduced to the variety of contexts in which political communication takes place (such as mass media, advertising, political campaigns and architecture); learn the fundamentals of rhetoric, be introduced to semiotics and understand how political communication affects our political institutions and democratic practices.

2. skills objectives:

Students will have the opportunity to develop oral presentation skills through class discussion of reading summaries and class presentations. Learning to critically analyze readings and a variety of academic approaches in class discussion will be an important component of each class. Active learning where students take ownership of their progress through the material will be central to this course.

Format:

It is essential that students come to class having completed the readings and be ready to discuss them in class. The format of each class will be in-depth discussion of readings.

Evaluation will be based on some combination of the following to be determined by the class:

1. Participating in class discussion
2. Leading discussion on a seminar topic
3. Completing a 20 page research essay
4. Writing a 5-7 page book review.
5. Writing a rhetorical analysis of any two political speeches
6. Writing an Exam
7. Working in teams of two or three preparing and responding to a political crisis
8. Working in teams of two preparing political or public interest ad campaign

In lieu of an essay, students will also have the opportunity to create a “flight” of advertisements on behalf of a political party or public interest group. This will be done in teams of two.

The precise breakdown of each of these exercises will be decided by the class in the first week.

Required Book:

Brian McNair, An Introduction to Political Communication (London: Routledge, 2014)
Recommended Books:

We will draw on readings from a number of sources. Limited quantities of the following book has been ordered as recommended texts only.

Mass Media and Democratic Obligations: the case of the “War on Terrorism”

The balance of the course will be spent with student presentations and discussion. The format of these classes will take the form of a 20 minute student presentation, followed by class discussion. There will be three student presentations per week.

The readings accompanying the seminar topics are merely guidelines to steer the class for the assigned topic. The assumption is that the presenter will have read more. Students should consult with me early on for additional readings.

In the past student presentations have been on topics as diverse as:
| -- The Codes of Television and the Creation of Myths | -- Civic Journalism |
| -- TV News and the Inability to Inform | -- Media Ownership and the Coverage of Political Issues |
| -- Negative Advertising | -- The impact of new media on creating democratic practices |
| -- Political Socialization & Political Communication | -- Feminism & Communication Studies |
| -- Role of Social Media in Politics: Is there a place for Twitter and Facebook? | -- State Branding: How governments market themselves |
| -- YouTube as a vehicle for democratization (case study of the Arab Spring) | -- How are gay/lesbian/bi/transgendered issues portrayed in the media? |
| -- Television Debates and the Fulfillment of Democratic Norms | -- Political Rhetoric: How has it evolved? |
| -- Political Advertising | -- Political Symbolism and the Construction of Myths |
| -- Government Advertising | -- Hate Propaganda: The Limits of Free Speech |
| -- The Impact of Public Relations and Political Consultants on Public Discourse | -- The uses and abuses of public opinion polling |
| -- Editorial Cartoons as vehicles of political persuasion | --9/11 and the creation of dominant news frames |
