Dean, Faculty of Education

With over 24,000 alumni, Queen’s Faculty of Education is a leader in Canada’s teaching and education research landscape. As part of a leading research institution, the Faculty is recognized for its integration of technology in teaching, learning, research, and administration. The Faculty offers Bachelor’s, Master’s and doctoral degree programs in education. Faculty members conduct research in cognitive processes in learning, language, arts education, mathematics literacy, assessment and evaluation, history of education, issues of inclusivity, and cultural contexts among other areas. Founded in 1907, Queen’s Faculty of Education is one of the oldest in Canada. Today, the Faculty is home to a community of very productive researchers, skilled educators, engaged students, and respected experts in their field.

Reporting to the Provost & Vice-Principal (Academic) Academic, and working in collaboration with the Associate Deans, the Dean of Education provides leadership to the Faculty, including long-term strategic planning, commitment to student success, academic development, advancement, and the management of the financial, administrative and human resources. The Dean plays a major role in linking with the education community and external stakeholders and in the development of a compelling, coherent vision of innovation, scholarship, and pedagogical excellence, while sustaining and enhancing its research prominence and the student experience. At the program level, the Dean works closely with the Associate Deans and faculty to ensure the effective and efficient transition and implementation of the new Consecutive and Concurrent Bachelor of Education degree programs while further strengthening and sustaining the graduate programs, which are some of Canada’s leading and most innovative programs of their kind.

As the ideal candidate, you are a strategic leader and systems thinker with a record of success leading change and delivering on a vision of sustainability, inclusivity, and pedagogical excellence. You are an established scholar with a Doctorate (or equivalent) in Education or a related field. You have experience leading research initiatives, securing grants and research funding, and supporting and motivating students and faculty in their scholarly pursuits. You are known for supporting and developing undergraduate and graduate programming. A trusted partner, you create/help foster mutually beneficial collaborations that enhance scholarly and pedagogical activities and optimize the efficient use and sharing of resources and university assets.
