

Did You Know that Queen's University Library...

Did you know that Queen's University Library is dedicated to supporting your research and teaching activities? You are welcome to consult and make use of the expertise of our dedicated staff, strong research collections, and superb facilities.

Services for Graduate Students

Graduate training and development

We offer a range of self-directed library how-to guides and workshops tailored specifically for graduate students. For examples, see the Expanding Horizons workshop series coordinated by the School of Graduate Studies. Some departmental programs also include library research workshops or seminars.

Research and Teaching Support

Each academic department or research area at Queen's is supported by a liaison librarian who can provide expert knowledge and guidance on the research literature in your area. Our librarians offer appointments for personalized in-depth consultations. You can learn more about our librarians and their areas of specialization online.

Our librarians also create subject and course guides to help you with recommended tools, resources, and research strategies. Check them out online at library.queensu.ca/search/research-subject and library.queensu.ca/search/research-course.

Research Collections

The library's research collections include millions of print and digital articles, books, media, and other archive and special collections as well as government information, maps and geospatial data, much of which is accessible anytime and anywhere with your Queen's NetID.

Research Data Management

We provide research data management services to help with the collection, analysis and discovery of your data.

Research Dissemination and Impact

The library provides a journal publication platform and services for faculty and students who wish to publish an online journal or series.

Graduate Theses Online

All Queen's graduate theses are made available online via QSpace, our research repository. Depositing your thesis, dissertation or graduate project in QSpace offers timely, broad exposure of your research to other researchers.
